The big one, in bold: where the song breaks hardest; in brackets, its eight-count from the beat. "On the 5": halfway through. Soft: it swells rather than hits. In grey: no big one, where its build-up lands ("full level": no break, where the song comes up to it). Shape: breaks as dots, loud stretches shaded. Sync this one: turn it up and land the hardest work on it.

Where every song breaks, on one page.

One song per block, in class order. Play the playlist on Spotify from the QR code on the front, then teach from the page.

The big one	0:29 on Dracula is where the song hits hardest. Build to it, and land the hardest work there: the deepest squat, the last fast set, the held pose.
(5 from 0:08)	Its eight-count. Count from where the beat comes in, at 0:08; the big one arrives on eight 5. "On the 5" means halfway through that eight. It still holds if you trim the start.
● Sync this one	The few songs worth turning up. Every other block can just run on the beat.
also 0:46 (9) soft	On a song to sync, its other breaks: more moments to hit.
2:51 (44 from 0:01) soft	In grey: no big one by ear. The time is where a build-up on it lands: its last break, or, marked full level, where the song comes up to full level. A dash means a quiet block.
Soft	The music swells back rather than hits: ease in, don't slam.
Wrap 3:08	Start bringing the block down here, before the outro runs out.
The shape	The line is the music, the dots its breaks, the shaded stretches where it runs loud.
Notes	The blank column is yours: pencil the move you'll land on each big one.

One favour

Teach a block from it, or the whole class, and tell me whether the hit landed where the page says.

A message to @arcbeat.yoga on Instagram is perfect, even one line. What you changed helps too.

Toward a flow state in class

Play the playlist. The body keeps time without being asked, and hard work on the beat feels lighter.

Teach from the map. The room already knows what's coming; the pleasure is in the waiting, the reward when the big one lands.

● Sync this one. The burnout lands on the big one, so the effort feels chosen, not imposed. The quiet before it is where your cue carries furthest.

The gains are modest; nobody has tested this in a yoga class. The studies, in plain words: arcbeat.yoga/science
